

Gerson Therapy While on Chemotherapy

Q: Can a patient begin the Gerson Therapy while undergoing chemotherapy?

- A. No. In most cases, chemotherapy works in direct conflict with a detoxifying therapy such as the Gerson Therapy.

When a patient receives chemotherapy, a significant percentage of each dose remains lodged in the body. When the Gerson Therapy begins to work, it can very quickly dislodge toxins from the cells into the bloodstream, including the chemotherapy residue. Patients with such a large amount of toxins being released into their bloodstream often cannot detoxify the body fast enough if they are using the standard intensive Gerson Therapy and may be prone to liver failure. At the very least they can become very sick.

When a patient comes to a Gerson treatment center, the doctors must implement the Therapy with them more gradually through reducing the amount of juice consumed and the frequency of enemas. This process often needs to be fine-tuned for each patient, and it may be reckless and dangerous for the patient to attempt to modify the program on their own. This is why we strongly encourage chemo-treated patients to come to a Gerson facility to begin the Therapy, and not to begin the Therapy at home.

Q: If I'm already on chemo, is there anything else I can do in the meantime to get started on the Gerson Therapy?

- A. Yes. A chemo patient would certainly benefit from following the Gerson diet and eating an organic, vegetarian diet. A chemo patient can also take juices—though not the full 13 glasses per day. However, a chemo patient cannot take the coffee enemas or castor oil treatments, so they cannot begin the full Therapy. Giving castor oil or coffee enemas can result in the release and overload of chemotherapy drugs into the circulatory system in a completely unregulated manner. This can have very serious, deleterious results and even death with highly toxic patients.

Q: How long do I have to wait to begin the Gerson Therapy after finishing chemo?

- A. 2-3 weeks. You must take a blood test before beginning the Gerson Therapy.

Q: After chemo, what protocol should I follow?

A. In Healing the Gerson Way book, there is a specific protocol for chemo pre-treated patients detailed in Chapter 18, on pages 199-203.

References:

- Healing the Gerson Way book:

- Chapter 18, pages 199-203. "Adapting the Therapy for Chemo-Pretreated and Severely Weakened Patients."
- Page 171: Castor oil treatment and chemotherapy.
- Page 237: Gerson treatment while on chemo

- Questioning Chemotherapy, by Ralph Moss, Ph. D.. This book can be ordered at Mr. Moss's website: www.ralphmoss.com.

- Article about chemotherapy by Dr. Moss, Ph. D:

http://www.cancerdecisions.com/030506_page.html

- Article "Chemo's Berlin wall crumbles", by Dr. Moss, Ph. D www.ralphmoss.com/ChemoBerlin.html